

Expanding Access to Telehealth in Kansas: Results by the Numbers¹

- 86% of Kansans say they support expanding or maintaining telehealth options in Kansas.
- 85% of Kansans believe that the ability to see a provider from your home and on the platform and device of your choice should continue.
- 85% of Kansans find telehealth services like virtual meetings with a health care provider to be helpful.
- 93% of rural Kansans think that telehealth is a good way to give patients who live far from major hospitals and specialists access to healthcare.
- 90% of rural Kansans believe that telehealth must remain an option for patients after the pandemic is over.
- 95% of non-white Kansans believe that telehealth must remain an option for patients after the pandemic is over.
- 90% of Kansans feel that expanding broadband access in Kansas would better allow Kansans to access care.
- 90% of Kansans think telehealth is a good way to access care without taking time away from work or family.

For more information, please contact:

David Jordan, United Methodist Health Ministry Fund, david@healthfund.org, 508.246.6825

Brenda Sharpe, REACH Healthcare Foundation, brenda@reachhealth.org, 913.568.8113

¹In February 2021, GS Strategy Group conducted a survey of N=600 likely voters in Kansas plus an oversample of N=200 non-white voters in Kansas on their feelings around telehealth and how it has impacted their lives during COVID-19. These statistics summarize the key results.